Darrel and his girls - in watercolor form

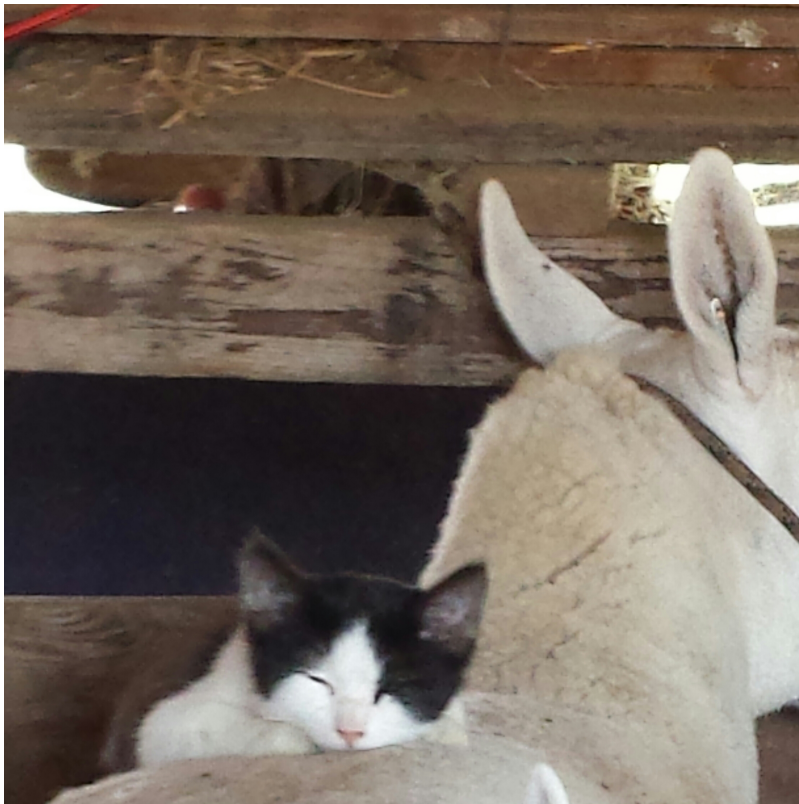

September 2013 - another sale season is done. Hay is tucked away nicely in my barn - I am sure it is tied with gold string as it put another hefty dent in my check book this year. The last load of round bales will be delivered mid next week. So we will soon be ready for winter. Lambs will come sometime the last two weeks of October. There are 10 ewes bred for fall lambs this year and they are starting to look a little tubby so that is a good sign. This was my last year of syncromates (yes I still had those left) so my ewes bred for January lambs were done with cidrs. I am kind of nervous about how it will work as I had great success with the old syncromates. Everyone marked so I guess the first step is done?
